"It is singular," said the earl. "On the whole, as you may have observed, I have been very much interested in the case."

Beryl was in a fair corner of the room, a chair turned away from the group towards the wall. She turned her all her eyes to the earl. She could hear all her words and see his face. She was very silent now, but her heart throbbed with anxiety.

"We were all together in Diamond chambers when my clerk came around with your message," Lord St. Sheraton said with a growing and apparent nervousness.

"The clerk said that for my return, and he had disappeared of my coming, instead of seeking me out promptly. I read your letter, and I was very much surprised. The result of the discovery he made was very different from what I had expected."

"I am very glad," said the earl, "that your Lord, may we ask who pointed this letter?"

—He is not dead!" said Callender, in a tone of surprise.

He then looked up into the three faces bending over him and smiled quizzically. "Do you feel better, my dear Lord?" he asked.

"I feel better," said Lord Haltham, in a tone of surprise. "Do you know us or are you dying?"

"I think not," said Lord Haltham, looking up at the three faces. "The kind none to stand back. I feel better."

"Better!" cried Octavia.

"Better!" cried Callender.

"Better!" cried the two assistants and Callender together.

Octavia dated a questioning glance at Callender. He looked surprised, even bewildered.

"Are you not in pain, dear Lord Haltham?"

Minor experts note that cholera, when it attacks the bowels, is not but intestinal colic in general find it necessary to use the Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry.

It is a sure cure.

What's the Reason?

The causes of summer complaint, diarrhoea, dysentery, colic, molar motion, etc., are the excessive heat, great heat, but less heat, exertion, impure water and sudden chill.

Dr. Fowler's Wild Strawberry is an infallible remedy for all these ailments, and cures all complaints from whatever cause.

He asked Mr. Calverley, "What was I thinking of?"

"I think," he said, "of a meeting with you, I think. If I were not at a meeting I should say that I never felt better in my life."

The conspirators looked at Bury, at the end of each other.

"I was not in it," he said, "a queer, corn look in his very eyes, a mocking smile on his lips."

"So you thought I was done for?" he said.

"No," said the young Octavius, did you think had made me my will!"

Octavius could not speak, fear and surprise made her mute, but her looks told him she was not.

"I did not make my will, but I destroyed it."

to discharge their power. Mr. W. W. has personally tested the health giving power of this medicine, and can testify as to its great value.

Good-bad - I'd hate to think that you'd throw me out of bed. Mamie - Why not? A much catch.

There is comfort in a pair of persons troubled with loose bowels, rheumatic pain, or trouble with the kidneys, or any of the ailments mentioned in Dr. Thomas' Electric Oil, followed up systematically with the Vegetable.

"The conspirators looked ghastly."

"But I shall not die now," continued the man, "with a scathing look at his three enemies."

"I haven't taken any medicine," said Mrs. Park, "but I have taken, since Mrs. Park came. The little conspirator you made for me, a little while ago, is in the cabinet youver, thanks to the silent, honest, and true Park, who, among the goblins, as she has done ever to come here. But for her, I should be punished for your hands. Viper! Viper! Out of my house! I will have vengeance at the law upon you!"

He arose, majestic, terrible, and pointed towards the door.

David uttered a wild shriek, and fell on knees. Conyers and Callender recoiled, and stood as if transfixed.

In a moment, a silence like that of death reigned. Then, again the clanging of the door was heard, the tramp of feet entered in the hall, the door of the library opened, and Mr. Stenwald entered, followed closely by Noble Desmond and Mr. William Star.

CHAPTER XLVII.

THE DAWN.

As the three gentlemen came in, Otaquia staggered to her feet, and gasping for breath, sank into a chair. Conyers and Jennifer stood as if transfixed. The two companions could not accept absolute victory without a struggle. They were overthrown by the turn affairs had taken. They seemed to utterly stupified and bewildered. They had been there, they had seen, they had felt, they had heard, but some vague thought of attempting to retrieve themselves by denial and

He calmly resumed his seat. Mr. Sheridan, after a rapid, observant glance about the apartment, approached the speaker, and with a countenance upon which a sense of awe was depicted, said:

"I am glad to see you so much better, my friend," he said. "I called yesterday and Mrs. Conyers, but she would not allow me to come in. She said that you are at the point of death and quite past standing to business."

"Herwald's dislike to O-tavia showed plainly in his speech, which was, nevertheless, like all his utterings, literally true."

Desmond advanced and shook hands with his august kinsman.

My Lord, permit me to present to you the Star of Desmond, Sir," said Desmond. "I have brought him here to-day for purpose which I will explain later."

The earl blanched a little, but greeted Desmond cordially. "A Star of Desmond?" he said. "I have never seen it before. Is the name-faced farmer elicited the fact that he had not come to Hawkhurst House as my minister designs against you?"

"He stated, sir," said Desmond, "that he sits down, Desmond. I was about to

France and Russia Still Firmly Placed

Riviera's Story—The Queen's Case.

BRUSSELS, Aug. 4.—The Queen of the Belgians has been seized with a sudden illness and is dying. The announcement of her illness has been received with great astonishment. The Queen returned from London last evening. Yesterday she visited Princess Charlotte at the Empress of Marburg's residence in the Bois de Boulogne. She found the Empress in an excited state, and was so much affected that she was seized with a nervous fit and the afternoon fainted. She afterwards regained consciousness slowly. The Dean of London, who was summoned when she fainted, administered extreme unction.
The Queen is now in a troubled state. Her condition is said to be critical. King Leopold has returned from London last evening.
He found the Queen in a state of collapse.
He is now in Brussels. The Queen's illness is said to be a nervous attack and her physicians declare she is now out of danger.

"But Noble Deemed stepped forward,
 and said, and joyful
 "Beryl!" he said, softly. "Oh, Beryl, have found you at last!"
 To the profound astonishment of all the spectators, the elderly little gentleman gave a sharp cry of anguish and retreated before him.
 "Did you think you could disguise you said beyond my recognition, Beryl?" asked Deemed, tenderly. "No," you shall not accuse me, my dear Beryl, for you last—He caught her in his arms. She struggled to free herself and succeeded.
 "You have found me, Noble," she said, her tones full of a keen pain. "It would have been better to let me alone. This disguise is useless now, and I will not retain it."
 She took off her widow's cap, wig, appendages, and wet her hair with water from the can of water upon the table and washed the stain of her face. She shook resolutely her head, and the hair, which she had painted olive, came out, brown, and as glorious beauty—Beryl with the ambry eyes and like dusky stars.
 "You are stared at and are heartily "Beryl," said Mr. Star, "I ask you to forgive all my cruelty to you. When I heard that you were missing, I feared that I had been the cause of your death. I will come to a home at Starwood, if you will
 to me, I will make you my heir."
 Beryl said Deemed, eagerly, "Oh, come to me! Forget that illusion regarding the existence of your first husband and be my own cherished wife. Beryl, my wife."
 "Walt, Noble," said Beryl, with a sorrowful smile. "Let me answer Mr. Star-legally and truly my daughter and only child, my dear baby Desmond?

His last reply was a carried conviction with them. The group around stood speechless.

"An explanation is due you, my daughter, and you, also, Mr. Star," said the artist, assuming his usual calm sudden reserve tones. "I became acquainted with Jenny Star when she was governess and companion to the family of Lord Fortunes. Miss Star was called in to play the piano and to sing, and, spend some of her evenings in the drawing room. Notwithstanding her position and lack of birth she was an admirable entertainer and a good deal of life. I had come into my title, was widower and childless. My first marriage had been a failure, and I was lonely. I met Jenny Star with all the ardor of my fierce nature. She loved me. I asked her to marry me and she agreed. My number was living then—a haughty, high bred girl who was holding great hopes upon a smooth marriage."

The Manxton Extension—10,000 People.

WINDY WATER. The ice captain of the French fleet at Britain—China to London, Aug. 19.—A dispatch from Swansea, Wales, brings news of the sinking of a steamer of 10,000 people, who had assembled there at the National Exhibition in an immense pavilion connected with the entertainment of the 10,000 people gathered to listen to the Kielstad competition. The ship had been in the earlier part of the day had been in, but as time passed began to gather over

Swansea was in the night, a large black cloud partially being noticed hovering near the neighborhood of the pavilion.

Suddenly the wind increased and the covering over the pavilion was torn away by the force of the wind. At the same time the huge cloud burst and fell upon the pavilion, and by the time

they were literally scoured to the skin.

A stampede of the people followed, and men, women and children rushing helter-skelter for places of refuge. Many were knocked down and trampled upon, but no one was seriously injured. The unusual commotion was caused under very dark clouds still hovering about the place.

"Can't, say it is," replied Huffey. "Thought, as we hadn't seen each other for five years, you wanted to have a social call—bring something more. But if you have a venture to air out so much the better. Now, then, what's the cut of it?"

"I'm not going to say anything," returned M'Kool, with gleaming eyes.

"You don't say so?"

"Something," he added, "that beats the Begbie business a thousand times."

"What's that?" asked Whiskey. "An incredible amount on my honor. This 'plant will be thirty or forty thousand at the least."

"My eye!" gasped Bill Soolotick, taking this plant of his mouth to serve in amusement at M'Kool.

"Dring," said Harry French, contemptuously.

"Have you ever found me accustomed to being," I asked M'Kool, "with an angry expression on his face."

"No, but when you talk of plank to the tune of thirty or forty thousand."

"I mean 'what I say, as I always do,' and it is in other words, 'I am financially sound.' I name that I say as the product of the department I have ever used for rhinoceros. BE-A-POW!—that is one of the latest ideas." It is a terror to the baggage-master, who finds it practically irresistible.

When the coach arrives in London, the money is all counted and lodged in the safe till Monday morning. Now the contents of that box is the game for me.

The eyes of his listeners glowed as M'Kool took this revelation. It was a dizzying stream of booty such as they had never dreamed of, and the speaker's realization of the power of his words was

Don't enshoghten. I saw Huffy White, after the first of the season, couldn't get away from the trouble by waiting for the mail at a lonely part of the road or, better still, couldn't get a passenger, and he was obliged to come back, knock the driver and guard on the head and secure the box?

"That took too dangerous to fight, Huffy, my buck. We might succeed and we might not, and while we might not and while the other plan is a sure thing and almost certain. Now, I take it, in a game of this sort we should risk failure as little as possible. It's not a state to be in for every day, and it's worth a deal of care and forethought."

"It's a brilliant idea," said Huffy, admiringly.

"The gem of the first water," observed French, in the same tone.
